Don't miss "The Last Lions" movie on Nat Geo WILD TV

Friday, December 16th at 8 p.m. ET/PT!

Big Cat Week on Nat Geo WILD Starts Sunday, December 11th 8 p.m. ET/PT
Interviewed last night on ABC Nightline, Dereck and Beverly Joubert discussed their decades of effort supporting the conservation of big cats. "We have to turn safari hunting into a sport that is purely taking a camera and seeing what you can capture, because if we don't, the images that we have are going to be the last of the species," said Beverly Joubert. Dereck and Beverly Joubert's wildlife feature film, "The Last Lions," won three prestigious awards at the 2011 Jackson Hole Wildlife Film Festival:
Best Theatrical Program
Best Original Music Score
Best Editing

"Gripping"

The New York Times
"'The Last Lions' is a worthy, intensive labor of love that took years to shoot and edit, and it's also more gripping than a lot of recent Hollywood thrillers."

Huffington Post
"The footage captured by Dereck and Beverly Joubert is fascinating, as much for its intimacy as, seemingly, its daring."

Los Angeles Times
"It goes without saying that their [filmmakers Dereck and Beverly Joubert] latest effort, 'The Last Lions,' is mightily impressive to look at"

The Boston Globe
"The film is an astonishing visual experience and at times almost profoundly suspenseful."

The Washington Post
"The tale has all the trappings of a good Jack London novel, including fearsome villains, such as a scar-faced buffalo leading a pack of its one-ton brethren, as well as a one-eyed lioness, well-known for killing the cubs of her enemies."
